Pedagogy of Teaching History

Concept note:

The more you know about the past,
the better prepared you are for the future.

-Theodore Roosevelt

History is called the mother of all subjects. Also History as a subject plays an important role in shaping political ethos and moulding people, and the societies in which they live. With this vital place in academics teaching, History proves to be very challenging as well as multi-tasking and multi-faceted process all the time. History as a discipline is very extensive in nature more so because of its constant connection with cultures and societies across globe which evolves continuously.

Hence, History has a diverse background too.

In spite of such a rich cultural, historical, social and political background, the reality is History does not receive the importance that it deserves. Why History as a subject at all levels of education always faces the threat of not being able to create its status as an important subject? The reasons could be many for the waning interest of students in History like perceptions of parents, students and general society about the low reputation of subject with respect to professional value.

Today as we try to adapt to 'New Normal', we need to think about use of appropriate, interesting and meaningful approaches, methods and strategies of teaching History to transmit historical information by engaging the students in critical and analytical mindset which will surely help in regaining the elegance of teaching history and create an effective reputation among the students, parents and society in general. This FDP is an honest effort towards that journey.

Outcomes:

- To help teachers to build the capacity to make informed choices in order to contribute constructively towards the transformation of the subject as per the changing times.
- To empower History teachers to enhance professional competencies
- To promote an understanding of various approaches for teaching of History
- To develop knowledge about critical thinking among the teachers
- To provide a framework to practice various approaches/methods about historical knowledge
- To motivate teachers to create better understanding of the past for the meaningful present and tomorrow
- To build the digital competencies among the History teachers
- To help History teachers make history more relevant to the students
- To develop confidence among the teachers about the relevance of various strategies in teaching of History
